Warm up (20 - 25')

What do we know about the Ancient Rome society?

Objective: To understand the social hierarchy in Ancient Rome and represent it in the form of a pyramid.

Students are introduced to the Ancient Rome society through pictures and a short reading description. Then, they are asked for identifying the different social classes.

1. Don't say anything and just present a picture or a variety of pictures of the Ancient Rome life (printed or screened). Then, ask students for analyzing the picture(s) to identify the society.
2. Teacher reads a short text of the Ancient Roman society. There are two different level of texts, so teacher can choose: Social Hierarchy in Ancient Rome or Social Classes in Ancient Rome.
3. After reading and commenting briefly, students draw a Roman society pyramid in their notebooks (or complete it if printed) with 5 stages (Emperor, Patricians/Senators, Equestrians, Plebeians and Slaves). There are 3 different levels of worksheet.

At the end, screen the complete pyramid to let students check their answers.

Preparation and teacher notes

- Print and prepare mission cards in advance.
- Make sure you have enough charged robots in advance.
- Place the floor mat in a safe, accessible space. You can buy it on the official Tale-Bot shop or just build it on your own using any flat material. Make sure it is bigger than 50x50cm.
- Brief students on Tale-Bot programming steps beforehand if unfamiliar.
- Consider preparing recorded model phrases for students with more language support needs.
- Optionally, prepare a rubric for observation-based assessment.

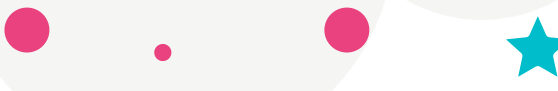

Build up (40 - 50')

Tale-Bot Social Class Mission

Objective: To relate social class with place of residence and privileges or tasks through programming and voice recording.

Students are divided into groups of 5, so each student has a role of the Ancient Roman society. Each student has the mission of matching their role with its location and privilege/task through programming the Tale-Bot.

1. Introduce the Tale-Bot and show a sample mission.
2. Give each student a social class role card (randomly distributed within the group). Then give the 5 location cards and the 5 privilege/tasks cards to each group.
3. Ask them to place those 15 cards on the mat. Then, let them few minutes to discuss and orally match the roles with their locations and privileges/tasks. After a while ask them to place the Tale-Bot at the start point.
4. Each student takes a turn programming the Tale-Bot to reach their assigned destination (role-location-privilege/task). During the mission, they have to use the robot to record a sentence about what they get on the mat (e.g. "I am the Emperor, so I live in a palace and I can command armies"). Optionally, depending how familiar they are with programming, they can help themselves ordering the ideas in a worksheet and also using the coloured command Tale-bot cards.
5. After programming, the group answers a reflection question aloud or discusses briefly among them:
 - Did your role has power?
 - Was this job fair?
 - How would you feel in this role?

Preparation and teacher notes

Teacher wraps up with emphasis on:

- Empathy for those without rights
- Awareness of how power and privilege work in society
- Importance of equity and social justice

Closing (30'): Class reflection and discussion

Objective: To reflect on the differences between social classes in Ancient Rome and express personal opinions about justice, rights, and equality in today's society.

Teacher asks the whole group some questions about the Ancient and the current societies:

1. Which roles had more privileges?
 2. How did it feel to be in a lower class?
 3. Can we find similar inequalities in today's society?
 4. What would you change if you lived in Ancient Rome?

HIGH LEVEL

"Social Hierarchy in Ancient Rome

The people of ancient Rome were born into different classes based on certain factors such as family, wealth and lifestyle. Imagine if you lived in ancient Rome. What would your life be like? What would your job be? What rights would you have? Well, in ancient Rome all of those things depended on what social class you were in.

Ancient Rome was made up of a structure called a social hierarchy, or division of people into differently-ranked groups depending on their jobs and family. The emperor was at the top of this structure (he was the leader of the society), followed by the patricians and senators (they were the wealthy landowners), the equestrians (those horse riders that were called to fight for Rome), the plebeians (common people but fortunately with freedom), and the slaves (who were the lowest class, were owned by rich people).

Your social class mainly depended on what type of family you were born into – Roman citizens didn't get to choose their class. Wealthy children were almost automatically a part of the upper classes, while children born to common people usually stayed in the lower classes for life."

LOW LEVEL

“Social Classes in Ancient Rome

In Ancient Rome, people were in different groups. These groups were called social classes. Your class depended on your family and how rich you were.

Imagine you lived in Ancient Rome.

- What would your life be like?
- What job would you do?
- What rules would you have to follow?
- All of this depended on your social class.

There were five main social classes:

1. The Emperor – He was the leader of all Rome.
2. Patricians and Senators – They were rich people who owned a lot of land.
3. Equestrians – They were men who had horses and sometimes went to war for Rome.
4. Plebeians – They were normal people, like farmers or workers. They were free.
5. Slaves – They were not free and had to work for rich people. They were usually born into slavery or became slaves after wars.

Children usually stayed in the same social class as their parents. If you were born into a rich family, you stayed rich. If your family was poor, it was very hard to change your class”.
